Who are we:

Agrícola Los Esteros is a family-run firm dedicated to producing a natural and effective tool in the fight against cancer and diabetes: Leptocarpha rivularis. The plant known as "Palo Negro" in Chile contains leptocarpin, a molecule that has been shown to have proven biological activity in a series of scientific studies. The herb has long been used by Native Americans within the Mapuche nation located in southern Chile as an antifungal, anti-inflammatory and antimicrobial. Our family became convinced of the plant's utility when we saw how it helped one of our own. The Leptocarpha rivularis utilized in our products is harvested under strict Chilean food-safety standards and processed on lines which are exclusively dedicated to packaging this particular plant.

We have one herbal tea product and two nutritional supplements.

We are currently developing new innovative products, with the help of our strategic allies, as well as actively collaborating in scientific research.

Description

Leptocarpha rivularis is a native bush that grows in southern Chile.

It contains a molecule with low toxicity and high specificity and efficiency that has been shown to contribute positively in diabetes treatments. In addition, it has anti-inflammatory effect, cholesterol control, and enhances immune system, all robustly described in the scientific literature generated in different universities.
